

The heading in the top left is small. This could be to leave more space for the picture so that there is more atmosphere on the page. However, it could be done to look stylish and different to what the audience would expect from this kind of conventional magazine.

There is one photo that takes up the entire page. This makes the reader focus on the photo as they are reading the text because the text is put on top of the photo. The overall look that this makes is stylish and it suits the target audience who are fans of this music genre.

There is a large quote on the left page which takes up most of the space that would otherwise contain the blank part of the image. This gives the page deeper meaning and it previews the article. The text is neatly displayed at the bottom right of the page. It is in front of the subjects' shoes and legs. The designer has chosen this location because it is not interfering with the reader's view of the subjects and is breaks up the dark colour of their trousers with the white text. By doing this, the designer has brought a brighter colour to the bottom of the page. This helps keep the overall design balanced and pleasing for the audience to look at.

There is a puff on the bottom left of the page. This matches the colour of the subject on the left's shirt and the headline text. It makes the colour seem more evenly placed around the pages because it is spread out in a triangular shape. The colour red looks like it is framing the quote. The colour resembles danger which could link with the musicians featured in the article and the genre it is talking about. The text in the puff is highlighted with some bold areas. This is done to show the reader the most important parts of the information that is being displayed.
